

Thoughts of Cliff

I met Cliff 20 years ago at my first job out of college. Here are some things that I remember and admire about him.

He was creative. Whether it was interesting, inventive and challenging (at least for me) music, or innovative ways to make a better, more flexible, easier to install and maintain A/V system. Cliff created.

He was a student of life. Always willing and eager to learn. About music, philosophy, technology, nature. Everything and everyone had a lesson. Cliff was interested in learning it.

He was always willing and able to help. With knowledge, information, experience, equipment, tools, or his physical presence. Cliff was there when it counted.

He did not believe in limitations. As he would say, “yes, the guy with the hearing aids and the glasses is you’re A/V consultant.” Cliff transcended.

Fortunately, I had the opportunity to learn from him, play music with him, and enjoy his company for 20 years. Somehow, that seems like a very short time today.

Cliff’s friend,
